SCHOOL FINANCE COMMISSION AUTHORITY TO TALK TO PARENT-TEACHERS ASSN

The November meeting of the Parent-Teachers Association will be held next Wednesday evening at the Bethel Grammar School. It is undoubtedly going to be an interesting meeting and each and every person professing to be at all interested in public school welfare should attend.

An authority on the Maine School Finance Commission from the State Department of Education will address the Association and conduct a round-table conference. This is a subject of vital interest to all taxpayers. Do not fail to avail yourselves of this opportunity to get first-hand information regarding this matter. A program of readings, vocal selections, and a Thanksgiving play will be presented. And, at the close of the meeting a penny lunch is to be served, the proceeds of which is to be given the Association. If you do not care to indulge in late lunches as do many of the regular attendants, you do not have to. However, your pennies would help greatly to swell the treasury. Supt. E. R. Bowdoin, Mrs. Celia Gorman, and Mrs. Adeline Fish are the members of the committee in charge of this meeting and are working very hard to make it of interest to all parents and friends.

RAIL BUILDINGS IN GRAFTON BURNED FRIDAY NIGHT

About ten o'clock Friday night it was discovered that the Walter Vail buildings in Grafton were on fire. Help from North Newry got there as soon as possible but too late to save anything. A strong wind was blowing at the time which made it impossible to get near the buildings. There was some insurance.

Eighteen members of the Auburn Lions Club, two from Waterville, and officials from other places, accompanied by their wives, attended a regional meeting with the Lions Club at Bethel Inn Tuesday night. A. Van Den Kerckhoven the King Lion of the host club, presided, and after making a pleasing address of welcome turned the meeting over to the regional governor, Dr. F. S. Epps of Auburn. Up to this time Dr. Epps had acted as song leader in the place of the Bethel member who was unavoidably absent.

A number of pleasing character readings with encores were given by Miss Ruth Leavengood, dramatic coach of Gould Academy.

District Governor Edward Longley of Waterville made appropriate remarks, commending the Bethel and Auburn clubs for their helpful Christmas parties for needy children and hoping that they would be continued this year.

Paul Danforth of the Belfast club brought greetings. In his capacity as special representative of Lions International he told of the advance that has been made in Lionism in the 41st district, Maine, in recent months. He said that this district leads in increased membership for the past months. New clubs have been formed at Pittsfield, Ellsworth, Bar Harbor, and Hope. FIVE JOIN POMONA AT MEETING HERE ON TUESDAY

Old Age Pensions Discussed—Good Program—Next Meeting at South Paris, Nov. 27

The regular session of Oxford Pomona Grange was held with Bethel Grange Tuesday. During the forenoon the degree of Pomona was conferred on five candidates, and one member was received by demit card. The new members are Mr. and Mrs. Hartley Ward, West Paris; Abner Kimball, Albany; Rev. P. J. Clifford, Bethel, and Miss Helen Vittum of Bryant Pond.

At this session there was a discussion as to whether the Pomona officers should serve for a one year term or for two years as is now customary. It was decided to vote on the matter at the annual meeting. It was voted to send the master, A. P. Stearns, Jr., and wife to the State Grange.

A second table was necessary to serve the large number of members and visitors who enjoyed the fine meal.

In the afternoon Lecturer A. H. Holman of Norway said that he had been disappointed in his program somewhat, some speakers not being present. A vocal duet was given by Mrs. Louise Dailey of Bethel and her father, Francis X. Casey of Livermore. Mr. Casey responded to an encore.

Rev. P. J. Clifford, the pastor of the local Methodist church, gave a character reading. He was dressed appropriately for the part and gave it well, an old farmer who recalls the old days and his sweetheart. A piano solo was given by Richard Russell of Bethel and he gave an encore.

V. W. Canham of Auburn was called upon to open a discussion of the old age pension. He discussed the Townsend plan and the plans of some other states and commented on the Maine plan that is on the statute books but for which no money is available. This led to a discussion of the plan of Senator William Bissett of Cumberland county, who will introduce a bill at the legislature to authorize a lottery to finance a State old age pension. By the applause given and the comments made the grange people are not in favor of such a lottery plan. This brought out sharp criticism of the beau game as played by some granges in Maine. This was criticised keenly. The prospects of some sort of liquor law for Maine was discussed.

This was followed by another reading by Mr. Clifford and an encore. Mrs. Clifford gave a very pleasing and touching reading, "Home, Sweet Home." Richard Russell gave another piano selection and an encore.

Charles George of South Paris, who was 100 years old in September, took part in the degree work, doing his part remarkably well.

The census of granges showed this attendance. Crooked River Grange, Bolster's Mills, 1; Hebron 1; Paris, 20; Norway, 13; Oxford 4; Bethel, 32; Bear Mountain, 4; Franklin, 35; Sweden, 5; Pleasant Valley, 2; Alder River, 2; Round Mountain, 5; West Paris, 7; Bear River, 12; Frederick Robie, 1; Pleasant Pond, 3; Livermore, 5; Canton, 1; Lone Mountain, 12; Lemon Stream, 4; total, 178.

On account of the meeting of the State Grange which takes place at Lewiston on the first Tuesday in December, it was voted to hold the next meeting on the last Tuesday in November, the 27th, at South Paris.

Misses Edla and Ruth Kendall, proprietors of The Marcia, exclusive dress shop in Cambridge, Mass., gave a fashion show, Nov. 1. Gowns, suits, and wardrobes of marvelous beauty and design were displayed. The Misses Kendall are natives of Sunday River, Newry, and have relatives and many friends in this vicinity.

Too Many Frien's

By GEORGE A. WILSON
© McClure Newspaper Syndicate.
WNU Service.

THE window squeaked slightly as it raised slowly upwards. There was the sound of a sigh as the dark figure slid over the sill. He walked on tiptoe across the kitchen floor to the door of the hallway.

He turned into the dining room and let his spot travel carefully about. It came to rest upon a china closet, then a polished side-table. Walking swiftly to the latter, the man pulled out a long drawer. In one short moment he had the silver rolled into a neat package.

Satisfied that he had done a good night's work, he left the house by the same window he had entered.

A young man and a girl sat at a table in one of the small restaurants in the more crowded and less luxurious part of the city. Their faces looked eager in the dim light. The youth indicated with a nod the tall man with gray-red hair who had just entered.

"See that man who just came in, Jane?"

"Yes. Do you know him?"

"Yeah. My dad and him were old friends. Since Dad died Red has been almost like a father to me. Gosh, he don't look like much, but he's a great guy!"

"Sure," the girl agreed. "I'll bet he is. Why don't you bring him over, Jimmy? We could tell him about us, now that your dad's dead."

"You bet! Red would be glad, too."

Jimmy Burke walked over and placed his hand on Red Martin's shoulder. Red whirled quickly.

"Oh, hello, Jimmy!"

"Hello, Red. You sure jumped when I touched you. Was you expecting somebody?"

"Well, no—not exactly," the older man answered with a grin.

"You're gettin' jumpy. Better lay off the beer."

"Saw, I always was kind of high strung like that. Have a glass of beer with me, Jimmy?"

"No, thanks, Red. I've got the girl-friend with me tonight, and she don't like me to drink it. Come on over to our table. I been tellin' her about you an' she wants to meet you."

"Sure I will, Jimmy!"

Red looked at the girl, Jane, he decided, wasn't pretty, but cute.

The girl returned his gaze warmly. "Jimmy's just been telling me that you're almost like a father to him."

"Aw, Jimmy's always spooin' like that. Me an' Jimmy's father was just pals, that's all. So I kind of keeps my eye on the kid, just to make sure he lives the way his father wanted him to."

Jimmy leaned across the table. "Red, Jane an' me's goin' to get married pretty soon now."

"Yeah?" Red looked pleased.

"That's the way for young kids to do. Me, I never had brains enough, I guess. When you plannin' on dain' it?"

"Just as soon as we get two hundred dollars more in the bank," Jimmy replied. "We got almost enough for the furniture now, but Jane's set on havin' a honeymoon."

"Sure," Red agreed, heartily. "Hot ain't it gold to take quite a while to save two hundred on your pay, Jimmy?"

"Oh, I'm working, too," the girl interrupted.

"Well, that's fine," Red said.

"Yeah," Jimmy said proudly. "She's a maid for some big shots up-town. She works for the Masons. They got a swell house on Third avenue."

"You mean that big brick one, that sets way back from the street?" Red asked, looking rather startled.

"Yes, that's the one," Jane said. "The Masons have been away for a couple of weeks, but they're coming back pretty soon. I shouldn't have gone away and left the house alone, but I haven't seen Jimmy for an awful long time. I guess it will be all right, though."

"Yeah," Jimmy added cheerfully. "It'll be all right. What could happen anyway?"

"I suppose if they found out you left the house, you'd be fired, wouldn't you?" Red asked.

"Yeah," Jane answered simply.

"An' Red continued, "If you got fired you wouldn't be able to get married for a long time. Either that or you'd have to go without this here honeymoon. An' you want that a lot, don't you?"

"You bet she does!" Jimmy answered for her. "But let's forget the old house. Nothin' goin' to happen to it."

Red sat scowling thoughtfully into his glass as the two young people talked on. Soon, he excused himself and left the restaurant.

For a second time that night, the kitchen window of the big brick house on Third avenue was raised and a dark figure climbed in. The man quickly reached the dining room and deposited the silver carefully.

Hearing steps approaching the front of the house, he ran back to the kitchen, climbed through the window, and lowered it carefully behind him.

"That," Red muttered to himself, as he walked rapidly away. "Is what you get for havin' too many frien's."

OPIUM SMOKING IN U. S. ON INCREASE

Federal Agents Alarmed by Sudden Spurt.

Washington. — Opium smoking which in recent years has declined in the United States, is showing an "alarming increase," the narcotics bureau of the Treasury department revealed.

Seizures of smoking opium by federal agents last year totaled 744 pounds, or twice as much as in 1932.
The bureau reported. Officials made no secret of the fact that they view the development with alarm.

Practically all the prepared opium seized, the records disclosed, came from China, and appeared to be mostly a blend of the Chinese and Persian product.

The heaviest seizures were on the Pacific coast, in the Hawaiian Islands, and in the Philippines, nearly all of the drug coming to these areas by ship from the Far East.

On the Pacific coast the most popular brands were found to be "Cheong" and "Yek Kee"; in the Hawaiian Islands, "Lam Kee" and
"Lo Fook Kee," and in the Philippines, "Lion," "Dragon" and "Tongee"—all identified by federal agents as originating in the Far East.

The price in the illicit traffic remained about the same as in 1932, but officers said it was due to the increased demand taking up the additional supply believed to be available.

Although the opium traffic has increased, government officials reported decreases in the seizures of heroin and cocaine.

Most of the heroin smuggled into the country came from French ports, while the cocaine seized was of Swiss origin.

Officials also reported a disconcerting development in a number of the states caused by the increasing use of Indian hemp, or "marihuana."

There is an extensive wild growth of the plant in Arizona, Colorado,
New Mexico, Texas, Utah and Wyoming. Federal agents found that in some localities many field laborers secretly plant marijuana crops and sell the product, or use it personally.

The drug is most commonly used in the form of cigarettes, selling generally from 15 to 25 cents each.
It is also mixed with beer or other beverages.

BOOKLET ON FARM CREDIT

A booklet has been published by the Agricultural Commission, American Bankers Association, on "Factors Affecting Farm Credit." For the purpose of furthering on a national scale the taking of farm inventories and the making of credit statements as reported by the commission in connection with the state colleges of agriculture and the U. S. Department of Agriculture. The goal is to bring about better relations between farmer and banker.

Let's Be Happy!

BY LAWRENCE HAWTHORNE

I like to turn men's thoughts away
From struggle and from strife,
And have them contemplate with me
The happy things of life.
I like to lead them down the paths
Of Nature's wonderland,
Where beauty, cheer and peace of mind
Are found on every hand.

It seems to me that life should bring
More happiness and fun—
More satisfaction and content
With every setting sun;
It seems to me that we should find Release from daily care,
And spend more time where friendly joys
Are waiting everywhere.

So many things men think they need,
And slave so long to gain,
Bring only misery and loss
And bitterness and pain!
So many things that fill our lives
With drudgery and toil
Are such a foolish price to pay
For all the fun they spoil!

And so, I like to turn men's thoughts,
As often as I may,
To things that help them to forget
The burdens of the day;
I like to guide their weary steps
Where friendliness and cheer
Will drive discouragement away,
And bring contentment near.

Early History of Rome Dates Back to 500 B. C.

Legend speaks of Rome as being founded in 754 B. C., but the actual date was much earlier, possibly as remote as 1000 years before the beginning of the Christian era, according to a writer in the Washington Star. Originally, the settlement was only a tiny market place at a point where the territories of the Latins, the Sabines and the Etruscans met. The first step toward metropolitan status was that of fortification, and the community expanded because it was a relatively safe place to live. Its central position, certainly, favored its growth as, later, it favored its domination of the peninsula. Also, its inhabitants acquired a reputation for courage of the highest order—they fought many wars and invariably were successful. Seven kings reigned during the period up to 510 B. C., when the people revolted against tyranny and set up a republic somewhat resembling that of Athens.

Such a republic, however, did not signify a representative democracy.
On the contrary, it meant rule by a minority, a small class of property owners known as patricians. For the majority, the so-called plebs, there were few privileges, few civic rights; and the circumstances led to a tedious struggle which endured for generations and was adjourned temporarily only when an alien enemy threatened.

The Gauls destroyed a large portion of the town in 390 B. C., but it soon was rebuilt and its prosperity thereafter was enhanced by successful campaigns against a long list of foes. In 264 power enough had been developed to challenge the naval might of Carthage, and the ensuing Punic wars left Rome mistress of the western Mediterranean and of all southern Europe from the Apennines to the Straits of Gibralter.

Curious Cacti

Few of nature's creations are more curious than many strange and weird members of the cactus family, says The Bliss Magazine. The curious shape of the cactus is due to the fact that these plants have discarded their leaves, and the parts one might think are leaves are merely thickened stalks. An ordinary plant gives off moisture through its leaves, but the cacti cannot afford to do this, for in countries in which they grow no rain may fall for the greater part of a year. The plant therefore has to store up moisture in case a rainy day does not come. An experiment with one of the giant American cacti found that it did not lose all its moisture for nearly one and a half years.

GORHAM NORMAL NEWS

On Friday evening, Nov. 2, the Poetry Club held a Halloween Party. At this time the new members were initiated. After which games were played and refreshments were served. Among those present were Barbara Howard, Sonia Cohen of Rumford and Myrtle Pratt of Upton.

Also on Friday, the Library Club sponsored a Theatre Party. They went to the State Theatre in Portland and saw "Happiness Ahead."
Eleanor Bush of Rumford and Doris Hunt of Norway attended. Miss Doris Hunt is the acting president of the club. At a recent meeting this club decided to plan a display for Book week. Hobbies are to be featured. Miss Myrtle Pratt of Upton is in charge of arrangements.

Friday during chapel exercises, athletic honors were awarded. Miss Doris Hunt received 25 points for Hockey playing.

The Keene Normal School track team was entertained here Friday and Saturday. The race was run Saturday morning. Gorham lost by one point, this being the first race lost this season. Richard Clifford of Bethel is a member of the Gorham Normal squad.

The House Committee was in charge of a Halloween Social held in Center, Saturday night. It was a costume party. Miss Sonia Cohen was chairman of the Costume Committee. There was a chamber of horrors, dancing, games, card-playing and jig-saw puzzles were the main forms of entertainment.

Misses Lucia Gupta and Vellie Gilma spent the week end with friends in Portland. Miss Eleanor Buck visited with relatives in Westbrook for the week end.

Among the guests at a party held Nov. 6 in honor of the birthday of Miss Elinor Chipman will be Miss Avis Hinds of Rumford, Miss Doris Hunt and Miss Mabel Austin of Norway.

At a frat banquet held Wednesday, Oct. 31, were Raymond Walker and Richard Clifford, both of Bethel.

849 BUSHELS PER ACRE BREAKS STATE AND NATIONAL POTATO YIELD RECORDS IN CONTEST

A measured yield of 849 bushels of potatoes per acre will probably win the annual Agrico Potato Raising Contest in Aroostook County this year for Kenneth LaPointe, a high school boy of Limestone. The yield, unofficially announced at a meeting of agricultural teachers at Fort Fairfield, is the largest on record in Maine, and the largest in the United States on unirrigated land.
LaPointe's crop was grown for the annual competition sponsored by The American Agricultural Chemical Company for the best yield of potatoes in Aroostook County grown by an agricultural student on approximately an acre of land, using the company's fertilizer.

Although all of the yields have not yet been checked, the contest has already broken all former records. Harvey Nightingale of Fort Fairfield, with a yield of 696 bushels per acre, was thought last week to be the winner, because his crop exceeded by a wide margin the top yields of other years. In 1931, the $100 prize money went for a yield of 550 bushels; in 1932, for one of 506 bushels; and last year a yield of 594 bushels carried off the first award.

Peafowls

Peafowls are indigenous to Asiatic countries. They are plentiful in the large forests of India and are found also in the mountainous regions.
They have been quite widely domesticated in America and in England where winters are not severe.
There are four varieties of peafowl, known as Black Winged, Common, Javan, and White. They are bred purely for ornamentation.
The Common peafowl is the variety most common in India. The Jungle fowl is a breed with fairly long tall feathers. This name is applied to the wild fowl from which it is claimed the modern domestic varieties have descended. Red and gray varieties predominate. They resemble the Rhode Island Red or the Leghorn chickens in body formation.

Turtles Check Water Mark

On the shores of the Amazon lives a species of turtle which lays its eggs in the sand a few feet above the line that will denote high-water at the time when the young are due to appear. The eggs are laid weeks ahead of the actual rising or falling of the river, and in some seasons there may be a margin of at least three miles in its width, but this tortoise or land turtle never makes a mistake, always depositing them in a secure spot just the right distance above the line which later will show the high-water mark.

Venus Has Dense Atmosphere

Venus has a very dense atmosphere, heavy clouds hiding the surface from our view. It is not definitely known how long it takes the planet to rotate on its axis. Probably it is considerably longer than our 24 hours, but it is very doubtful if Venus, like Mercury, keeps one face perpetually turned toward the sun, for if it did the dark side would be extremely cold, whereas it seems to radiate an appreciable amount of heat.

THE MAINE MEETING PLACE

For the second week in succession, everything else must go by board in favor of news.
The news this week is about new idea that we are putting in effect Monday in a spirit of something closely allied to desperation. It is an attempt to help alleviate a trying situation. We are hoping that, while it is just a start, it will give us a line on what we can do in the future. We, in this case, the Agricultural Department,
the Maine Development Commission.

As you know, we in Maine have been extremely coy about telling the rest of the country that we farmers raise the best potato apples, corn, beans, peas, etc., honey and what have you, in the world. The result has been an advertisized products from other States have not only been burdening into our own markets but have been flooding any new markets could hope to develop.

No one in particular has been blame for this state of affairs.
We have just neglected to appropriate any money for this purpose.

Now, however, it seems to be a case of do or die. One class our people—the potato farmer—find themselves in an unenviable position. They have a record of a slow market, and heartbreaking prices. At least a part of this is inadequately stored and with a total loss unless it is disposed soon.

It would be nice at this time to launch a comprehensive advertising campaign throughout New England and New York at least.
Of course we haven't the money.

Unable to do this, we are going to do the next best thing. We the few dollars that the Commission of Agriculture has been able to spare from other budgets, we are going to put on a campaign Maine with the hope that we get a great part of our citizens buy enough potatoes to last them the next crop is on the market.

We can't hope to make more than a small dent in the available crop.
We do hope, however, to be able to move some of these unprofitable potatoes so that the danger of freezing will be eliminated in many cases. Then too, our consumers will benefit by the cheapness of some of the best produce ever raised.

Perhaps more than all this, I thought that we can get all of people to work together in a one-another spirit. It may be about a new conception of what we are capable of if we can get harness together. We'll all get a lot of experience in this little campaign, and in the future perhaps we can show 'em something.

must not expect our customers to bankers and understand all factors which we must consider in granting a loan. If we find a loan is not, and cannot be, bankable, then I think we take pains to explain the reason why it cannot be granted. There are other measures which it is important for the banker to undertake in order to eliminate misunderstandings which have arisen and overcome the sentiment which exists. Under present conditions we have to operate under laws and regulations, and watch what further legislation is proposed which affects our mode of operation and may not be in the best interest of the community we serve. Nowadays it is at times we must sit with a book in one hand and a book of regulations in the other in order to make certain we are discharging our daily duties and functioning in accordance with the law. This is very trying, yet I think in the end we shall become bankers. It is the duty of every banker today to endeavor to understand the public he serves. In addition to his daily duties, trying as they are, he should participate in activities of his community, so that with the fund of information available to him, he may be as helpful as possible.

Business Is One of Oldest Known Industries. The fur trade is one of the oldest industries known to mankind. As far back as there is any record, says a writer in the Montreal Herald, we find man killing animals for food and using the fur for protection from the weather. The first he used the skins raw—without any preparation. It was a makeshift occurrence when he invented a way to make them soft and pliable. As long as he needed only for necessities, and paid attention to ornament, he turned his hairy side toward his body. At the time, when, for appearance, the hairy side of a man's skin was worn externally, he dated the use of furs in the which we now apply to the sheep, whose wool forms the basis for nearly all woolen clothing, came originally from Asia, and many centuries must have passed before the tender sheep could be conveyed to and reared in northern countries, where thick forests produced in abundance a great many varieties of furs which were capable of supporting the best furs; and where people lived too widely scattered to be led soon to the cultivation of the manufacturing arts by changing experiences.

The Household

By LYDIA LE BARON WALKER

SUITS the furniture to the architectural style of the house or the house to the furniture is of vast importance if you expect a pleasing consistency. The former way is the usual one, but there are instances where persons have specific types of furniture, either by inheritance or through collection, and they need it suitably housed. Then the dwelling is built or bought to suit the furniture. When a residence is of no definite architectural style, or the furniture or furnishings either, there may be charming harmony in decoration without stressing any feature particularly. But when a house is in Spanish architecture, or Italian, or Colonial—either Georgian or Southern French Colonial—or a Cape Cod farmhouse, then suiting house and furniture for consistency should be stressed.

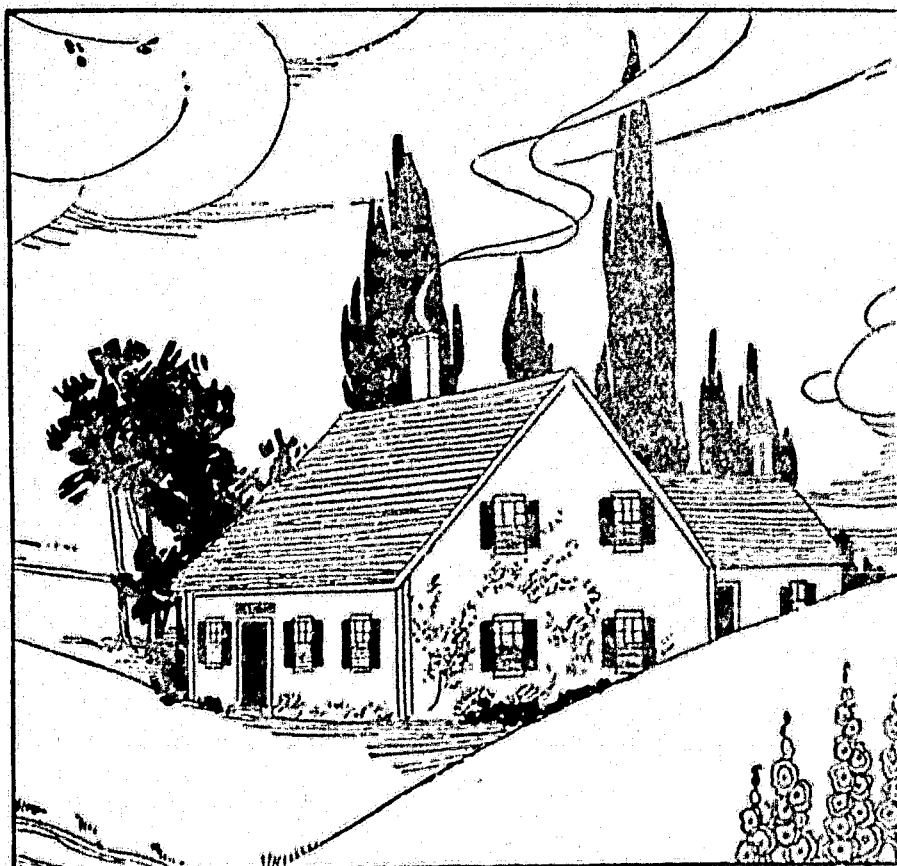

It is well to bear this in mind, since however delightful either the inside decoration is or the architectural style of the house, one is aware of something radically wrong when they do not agree. I remember visiting one house which was on Cape Cod, and was one of its charming farmhouses. To discover, on entering, a galleried living room in modern French treatment made one almost gasp, though the room in itself was very inviting. It was the incongruity that appalled.

Too Much Variety.

I remember another town house, one in a brick row. The owner was giving individuality to each room by having it decorated in a period, at variance with the other. There was a French salon effect in the front room, a Georgian treatment in the next, and a Dutch paneled decoration in the dining room beyond. You looked from one room into the other and were impressed with the inconsistency. Another residence comes to mind. The owner and his wife had been collecting early American furniture and furnishings for several years prior to building. The wife had even made handsome patchwork quilts, some of silk and some of the cotton goods of her discarded frocks and those of her youngsters. When the house was built and furnished there was about it a satisfying consistency and a comfortable restfulness which such harmony induces.

Today Spanish furnishing is much esteemed. Italian is almost as popular, and peasant furniture and furnishings are in high favor. When they suit other furnishings and the style of your home then they are well chosen. But if they do not harmonize with the furnishings you already have or suit the house, they are a mistake. It is not enough to be in the mode. It must be a harmonious union of furniture, furnishings and architecture.

COMPTROLLER COMMENDS INSTITUTE OF BANKING

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The American Institute of Banking, said to be the most successful project of its kind in the field of applied adult education, has performed a valuable function in training bank clerks for "sound public service as well as personal success," J. F. T. O'Connor, Comptroller of the Currency of the United States, said here in a recent radio address. The Institute is a section of the American Bankers Association.

"While imparting useful knowledge, it has improved the morals of banking personnel and has stimulated in its members an intelligent interest in national and international monetary problems," Mr. O'Connor said. "Its courses cover a wide field in banking. Among the subjects, one finds Bank Organization and Operation, Commercial Law, Negotiable Instruments Law, and Economics, in the Pre-Standard Division; followed by such subjects as Money and Banking, Credit Management, Financial Statement Analysis and Bank Management, in the Standard Division.

"Each and every subject is one which is necessary to a knowledge of banking. However, the Institute does not stop here, but encourages graduate study in Corporation Finance, Trust Service, Farm Credit Administration and Business Forecasting. Again it emphasizes in special courses the importance of the less technical but highly beneficial study of Constructive Customer Relations, Banking Fundamentals and Public Speaking. No comment is necessary on these courses: their value is at once apparent."

Joseph Poplinger, Europe's "One Eyed Connally"—known as the king of stowaways—has traveled for seven years without paying fare. He is here on a free trip to marry an American girl, and gives a cheery greeting to New York's skyline from a porthole of the liner Bremen.

Color Affects Growth

In an experiment made on guinea pigs in the laboratory of the paint and varnish industry in Washington, the walls of the cages housing the animals were painted different colors. All guinea pigs were given the same amount of food, but those kept in compartments in pale blue, white and light tan grew fat and sleek, while those confined in dark green, black and dark red cubicles lost weight.

"FRIENDSHIP VILLAGE" GREET'S YOU ON THE AIR

Sunday night, Nov. 11, at 11 o'clock, WCSH at Portland is presenting "Friendship Village"—featuring the fine old time hymns being sung in the home of Captain David Bradford on a little hill down the coast. This picture of Sunday evening at Captain David's is given entirely by Maine people in a Maine setting and we feel sure that all loyal State-of-Mainers will wish to meet their new acquaintances of "Friendship Village" and enjoy the old time hymns.

Mexican Hairless Dogs' Color Changes With Age

Most hairless dogs are remarkably intelligent and very active. . . a circumstance particularly true of the terrier-sized specimens, some of which are attractively built along lines of the Manchester terrier, says an authority in the Los Angeles Times.

Occasionally one of these attains that racy whippet-like sleekness. Another larger variety, bordering 25 pounds. . . short-legged, cloddy and more unpleasant to the eye, is inclined toward laziness. Tiny specimens weighing four or five pounds are often erroneously referred to as Chihuahuas.

Commonly called the "Mexican" hairless, he may, nevertheless, be found throughout entire Central and South America and is frequently encountered in parts of Africa, China, the Philippines and West Indies.

The color of his sausage-like bald exterior changes, often with age. In puppyhood it is usually shrimp-pink with a few black or blue spots. Approaching maturity, these spots increase in size and number, gradually blending into a solid color along the back.

Others remain unchanged. They present a marble-like combination of color. Still others are of a mottled brown. Texture of the skin, while not that quality one loves to touch, is soft and extremely delicate. . . very sensitive to changing temperature and easily blistered if exposed to the sun.

Henry George's Platform Had to Do With Taxation

When Henry George ran for the position of mayor of New York city, his platform was largely based on the precepts which he had set out in Progress and Poverty, notes a writer in the Washington Star. He believed in equality and freedom, and was opposed to ignorant prejudices. He believed in the abolition of custom houses and of excise and licenses. His platform involved social organizations rather than political ones. He spoke of poverty in the city of New York and the crowded conditions. In speaking of his platform he said:

"We propose in the first place, as our platform indicates, to make the buildings cheaper by taking the tax off buildings. We propose to put that tax on land exclusive of improvement, so that a man who is holding land vacant will have to pay as much for it as if he was using it."

He further said that he had made a vow to seek out and remedy, if he could, the cause that condemned little children to lead such lives as they were known to lead in the squalid districts. He said that he was beginning a movement for the abolition of industrial slavery.

Invented the Parachute

The parachute has been known for centuries. In 1783 Sebastien Lenormand practically demonstrated the efficiency of a parachute by descending from the tower of Montpeller observatory. To J. P. Blanchard (1775-1809), is due the idea of using it as an adjunct to the balloon. The seat pack type of parachute used by the army in 1918 and 1919.

FLOOD SCENES at Bethel

Yesterday's Song

WNU service

"MY DEAR!" Hortense came swiftly forward to greet Lavinia, hands outstretched. "How lovely you look! You know, I'm perfectly thrilled at giving this announcement party for you. Everyone's going to consider it a brilliant match, I know."

Lavinia's smile seemed a trifle forced.

"Thank you," she said; "you're sweet to have thought of it. Have you—that is, do the others know?"

Hortense laughed lightly. "Certainly not, darling! I wouldn't dream of spoiling such a dramatic surprise. I've planned to keep it until after luncheon. Do you mind?"

"Oh, no!"

Chastly Hortense went on: "I made this an affair just for women because I couldn't bear to think of all the males in Hollywood overcome by despair right here in my house. I really don't believe you know, Vin, how you've captured hearts in these last six months. Why, you've become such a radiant different person. Is it your success in pictures, or Felix?"

"I don't know. Perhaps it's just that I've grown into the habit of acting and carry it on away from the studio, too."

After a quick glance at her, Hortense casually remarked: "Well, whatever's the answer, you've blossomed marvelously. I remember when I first met you, how forlorn and unhappy you seemed. I realized later that was because you'd just separated from Raoul."

"By the way," the hostess pursued, "have you ever heard from him since?"

Lavinia's golden head shook a slow negative.

"Not directly. I heard that he gave up his job to come here when I stayed, but I've never seen him; he didn't even appear at the divorce hearing."

Beyond the French windows, upon the broad lawn, were spaced a dozen or more daintily appointed tables. Soft music sounded faintly.

"Oh, how delightful!" Lavinia cried. "An orchestra, too?"

"Yes," Hortense said, leading her onto the terrace; "I thought it might be nice, and it's patriotic. They're a little group from the artists' bureau of the unemployment relief agency."

Lavinia wasn't conscious of her going, nor of anything else in that enclosed space. She had only glimpsed. There beneath the apple tree he stood, brown hair whirling, brown moving deftly in his long fingers as he led the musicians. Raoul! Silently her lips formed the name, as a brief wave of mixed feeling swept her. Then Hortense was beside her once more, introducing someone. . . .

For the next quarter hour she had no chance even to glance in his direction. But, moving among the guests to exchange social amenities, her thoughts were constantly of him.

At last Hortense guided her to the table where they would have luncheon. It was within a few yards of Raoul and his men. She had been seated but a moment when from behind her burst forth the rich, wild strains of "Dark Eyes" played upon a violin. Her heart missed a beat, only to resume with a furious pounding that drove the hot blood into her throat and temples.

He had seen her, then, for this was their love song—the one he played the first night they spoke of love.

"Why, dear girl!" Hortense was leaning anxiously toward her. "You have scarcely eaten a morsel. Don't tell me I've been stupid enough to have things you dislike!"

Lavinia smiled, murmured something in denial, and mechanically picked up a fork. An instant more and Raoul's instrument was still.

Hortense finally suggested they go indoors for demitasse and liqueur. Lavinia rose resolutely, and without a look behind started across the grass. She had heard the quiet clatter and rustle of departure among the musicians; shortly they would be gone and this fantastic interlude but a memory. Soon Raoul would be out of her life again and everyone would hear of her engagement to Felix Aaronson, the brilliant young producer. . . .

She reached the portico last; the others had all gone in. An insistent impulse gripped her and she turned. Alone by the acacia's sleek trunk was Raoul, violin yet in hand. A mask of infinite sad bitterness was upon his face. The deep gray eyes gazed toward her, brooding.

Lavinia's sob was barely audible. Over the close-trimmed turf she ran swiftly to the man beneath the tree.

Miss Prout found Hortense seated by herself in a far corner of the music room, sipping chartreuse and smoking.

"Oh, I've been looking for you!" rattled Miss Prout. "Here's the announcement you asked me to type. Will you want to read it now?"

"No," replied Hortense, smiling just a bit; "no, I shan't, Georgia."

You may as well tear it up. The lady it concerns was unexpectedly called away because of—of some music—some music I took the liberty to arrange for her. She may be detained—well, indefinitely."
